Maharana Pratap was the king of Mewar. Pratap was a king and yet he had no love of comfort. He had the welfare of his people at heart. He was proud of his honour and he was so good to the people that they were ever willing to sacrifice their all for his welfare. There is a story that Pratap gave his turban to a poet who had pleased him with his verses. The poet went to Akbar's court but took off the turban before bowing to the emperor, who was surprised and asked him why he bowed bare headed. The poet answered, "Your Majesty, this turban belonged to a man who has never bowed his head to another man. This is Maharana Pratap's turban". Pratap took vow that until Chittore was recovered, he would live a hard life. He would not use gold and silver dishes at meals; he would use the leaves of trees instead. His bed would be of straw and he would not shave his beard. He ordered that no one should plough the fields and no crops should be grown in the country. After that he attacked his enemy and received his lost kingdom.

Whenever I see
Gas balloons go up
I wonder where we'd end up
If we're balloons.
Would we go far away
To some unknown destiny ?
Or will it be carefully decided goal

Balloons! How much they're Like human beings —
 So different from each other in colour, shapes, design and sizes Some live long and some don't just like us some find pair of loving hands and some don't They get lost or destroyed
 Like we do
 At times
 They rub cheeks affectionate Occasionally you can hear them whisper secrets As only friend will
 And once in a while, in the chill of the night or the mist of dawn
 You may find one tear flowing down silently.
